is better than a maul user with a dagger -there is nothing to fill that gap. Both arms and might. A: I believe that the idea is that a special weapon is more powerful and gives you bonuses than a traditional weapon or shield. So, a weapon would be better than a mace, but not better than a weapon (and shield) combination. According to the description of weapons in the rules: the weapon can also provide a bonus when you use it to make a melee attack. So, what the rulebook is saying is that a weapon is better than a mace or traditional weapon, but not better than a weapon and shield. It's a good combination, and not one of the three. If you want to have three weapons/shields, then your combination is better than two of the individual components. Q: RSpec - testing rails authentication process This is my first time with rspec. I would like to test a simple login in my rails app. Basically I am testing if there is a session set and if the user is logged in. I am able to create a login. But I don't know how to test if the session
